657 Though most of the contacts between village people and the 647 office-bearers arise out of official roles, the local priest, the 197 assistant medical officer in charge of the Sasembata mission hospital, the mission teachers, the council's sanitary officer and others who lived near Sivepe, or temporarily stayed near Sivepe, tended to have at least one or two families with whom they were on mutual visiting terms and who regarded them as personal friends. At the same time, their relationship with many of the other Sivepe families remained definitely formal.

Contacts occurred almost always either in Sivepe or in a village nearby, on the initiative of the office-bearer (if the contact was official). Formal visits by councillors, sanitary inspector, [799] coffee factory officers occurred about once monthly. Contacts with Church personnel occurred almost daily at the mission station, though formal calls by the priest or a teacher to Sivepe were made perhaps once a month, usually in connection with some quarrel that [757] had arisen. The village was most active in its contacts with the mission hospital, several patients presenting themselves daily with [743] minor ailments. Serious cases were often referred to Saiho hospital [758] and most of the referred cases actually went to Saiho. There was a monthly visit from nurses dealing with infant health and expectant mothers; most of the mothers took their babies to be checked and weighed and no objections were made to preventive injections.

[582] There were no cases, in Sivepe, of inter-marriage between local people and Papuans occupying these specialized roles, but in Inonda one man married the mission teacher's daughter. Otherwise, contacts of the type described in this section were sparser in Inonda, as the mission and medical establishment was at Hohota, [232] three miles away, and on a far smaller scale. Inonda did have some direct contact with government over agricultural matters as one man expressed interest in entering an experimental scheme for growing beef cattle. He has adquate land and education, but the scheme had not gone beyond initial discussions by the time I left. [494] Finally, Inonda had an arrangement with a Papuan who was a distant affine and who had a truck with which he took garden produce weekly from Inonda to the Embi hospital. The village people paid this man for his carteage. No comparable arrangement existed in Sivepe. Finally, contact with the officers of the Local Government Council seemed to me less frequent in Inonda than in Sivepe and to generate much less interest. This was no doubt due to rivalries between the village leader and the councillor, but also to a less keen interest in council objectives on the part of the majority of families.

197 The contacts described in this section, unlike the ones discussed earlier, do not characteristically occur in a kinship context. Hence, the contacts do not necessarily occur equally with all categories of members of the community, but when the problems have to do with land or politics or the conduct of village affairs, the married men are principally concerned; in educational matters
